

Smart ForTwo Makes Its Official Debut At The Detroit Auto Show

{mosgoogle right}In addition the several Mercedes concepts making their debut at the Detroit Auto Show this week, another member of the Mercedes Car Group family - the new smart fortwo - is also making its inaugural appearance in the U.S., finally giving American consumers a glimpse as to what they have to look forward to beginning in early 2008. To coincide with its auto show premier, DaimlerChrysler today has published an exceptionally in-depth press release outlining the new smart fortwo, delving into its many features, specifications and so on along with a "Frequently Asked Questions" section for those of you who may have questions pertaining to the lovable mini-car. There's also a number of photos showcasing the new smart in various poses, providing a visual feast for those of you eagerly awaiting the fortwo's impending arrival.
