

New Mercedes Warning System Prevents Drivers From Falling Asleep Behind The Wheel

As you may remember, back in November of last year we brought word that Mercedes was in the process of developing a new fatigue warning system - a technology capable of detecting when a driver is exhibiting signs of drowsiness, and furthermore, instantaneously alerting the driver of his tired state. Yesterday, Mercedes announced that this new system, aptly-titled 'Attention Assist,' is now entering its final testing stage, with series production planned for 2009.
